DEFINITION & AIM OF THE PTA:

The Parents-Teachers Association is a collaborative association composed of parents and teachers. The main purpose of this body is to establish a bridge between parents and schools, facilitating communication and cooperation.

PTAs presuppose frequent interaction and a commitment to the school's well-being on a continuing basis. It is where voices can be heard, ideas can interflow, and problems can be solved together.

PTAs offer a channel through which cooperation takes place, enabling parents and teachers to work toward common goals.

PTAs create a link between parents and schools. They provide a channel for parents to air their grievances and for schools to disseminate information about changes in curriculum, upcoming events, or problems dealing with student behaviour.

PTAs ask parents to be more involved in their children's education either by volunteer work, attending meetings, or staying informed about school activities and student progress.
